

driving by faith: reflections from a cross-country traveler

Im a traveler by worldly definition. Living out of a suitcase. No place to call home. A few days here, a few days there. Were all travelers by spiritual definition. Living out of a suitcase of temporary earthly possessions. No place for our hearts to call home. A few seasons here, a few seasons there. Without a job. Without a home. Without a clue as to what the future held. Confident in the Lord who directs our steps. This is how Erin Claxton began 2008. As both a worldly traveler and a spiritual traveler, she embarked on a three-month, cross-country road trip fully expectant that God would, indeed, direct her very steps. And not only her steps day by day, but her steps hour by hour as she offered herself to God, desiring transformation by the renewing of her mind and desiring conformity with His good, pleasing, and perfect will. In this Christ-centered chronicle of her physical journey, Erin Claxton points us to the God behind the journey, the One who orchestrates the details of our lives that we might know Him better. Both thought-provoking and humorous, her daily reflections from three months on the road challenge us to recognize the Lord in all aspects of life. This is my conscious effort. Daily worldly travels that set my mind on things above. That set my mind on the Savior I eagerly await. That set my heart on home.
