

Resume Writing Success Made Simple: Secrets the Pros Dont Want You to Know

Does the world really need yet another resume writing (CV writing) book? There are already hundreds in the marketplace Amazon alone lists more than 2,950, and most of those are also available for Kindle. So why do we need another? One of the UKs top Career Coaches and CV/resume Writers Stephen Thompson has lifted the lid on some key elements that dramatically improve the effectiveness of the CV or resume in your job search; key elements that are seldom mentioned by professionals. Why are they not mentioned? Steve leaves the answer to that almost rhetorical question to the reader. He believes, in this age of increasing transparency, that he has an obligation to the job seeking public to share his specialist knowledge about resume writing.

Unlike many of his contemporaries, he doesnt feel that sharing this information will damage or weaken his business. Writing interview winning CVs and resumes, cover letters, and providing job search advice is his bread-and-butter. Its not a hobby. So why does he think making these insider secrets public wont have an impact? During a recent job fair interview, Steve had this to say in answer to the question: Much of the information I share in this book is common sense. The problem is that common sense is not that common today. People are busy, and have multiple competing distractions in their lives. Plus language, and the skill of writing, are becoming more and more diluted as so-called text speak, media and celebrity slang, and a gradually declining education system take us further and further away from good formal communication. Although Im effectively giving away this information, the majority of my clients are professionals. They have neither the time nor the inclination to write their own resume, and would much rather trust a fellow professional to do the job properly for them. Its no different really than employing a mechanic to service your car, tasking a solicitor to handle your Will, or engaging an architect to deal with your kitchen extension.
