

Delayed Dreams: Memoirs of a Born Oppressed (Swaziland)

Delayed Dreams: Memoirs of a Born Oppressed (Swaziland) This is my second book in the Memoirs of a Born Oppressed (Swaziland) series. It is really a sad life experience of a young ambitious graduate that had dreamt of a brighter future flowing with money, happiness and putting him at greater chance of breaking free from poverty. This book reflect on my one year after graduating at varsity; a tense struggle for a job amid poverty, corruption and nepotism, racism and gross violation of labour rights in Swaziland. Frustrations for unemployment are quite taxing; sending loads of applications and getting no response, and going for many job interviews without success. That has been the case with me. Life is a bitch in Swaziland and the poor has no shoulder to cry on. I had, in one of the many interviews for a job, been unfairly disadvantaged and challenged one big company with no success. You need a strong financial muscle to see justice but to be poor is a great misfortune. Desperate for a job; I had wished for any job to keep me going in life and was more willing to do volunteerism. I finally got a job in one of the countrys largest sawmills but within one month of my employment, I swiftly tendered my resignation. I was better off languishing at home than being in that firm. Who in 21st century would tolerate beatings, derogatory remarks and insults from racist whites, the remnants of the apartheid regime of our neighbour South Africa? I am not alone in this mess; 42% of my countrymen are unemployed, 63% living in abject poverty and Swaziland is listed among the worlds top ten worst violators of labour rights. I remain unemployed, live with my parents and love blogging and chatting at social networks. Follow me on Twitter: @MkhoDlamini
