

With All Due Respect

From its formation in 1967, the Real Time Club has included in its membership some of the leading entrepreneurs, academics, politicians and journalists in the UK's computing industry. Together, they are helping to shape the environment for doing business in this country. With All Due Respect - A History of the Real Time Club chronicles the achievements of the Club over the past forty-five years and makes fascinating reading for anyone interested in how an informal group of passionate and slightly rebellious individuals can challenge the status quo - from the availability and costing of data communication lines, over computing in education, to financial service legislation and venture capital.
