

The Good, the Bad and the Unbelievable: Carers I have known

I have called this book The Good, the Bad, and the Unbelievable for a reason, as it tells of the highs and lows of a person with a disability who has to depend on assistance from other people with the basic necessities of daily living. These people are referred to as personal carers. They are there to provide assistance and support to people with disability in every way necessary. Every chapter tells a story about a care giver, and as you read you will discover who the Good, the Bad, and the Unbelievable carers are, those being the ones I've had since acquiring my disability 50 years ago. There were many others I could have written about, but I think I have selected a good mix of individuals to help others know what they are looking for when engaging people to work for and with people who require care.
