

LIVE THE DREAM: INSPIRING STORIES FROM AFRICA

This book is a memoir of an ordinary Zimbabwean youth on his way through the jungle of life. It is a result of my love for history and many questions asked by my guests during the course of my work as a tourist guide. Driving through rugged roads and sitting under the starry African sky watching bush TV (campfire) we talked and laughed deep into the night. The globe is more eager to know and understand Africa more than ever before. Africa has one of the most growing economies in the globe. The rest of the world is interested in knowing and understanding this continent. It is time Africa tells her story. The questions challenged me to find out who I was and where I came from. I traced and documented my family history from KwaZulu Natal in South Africa. It also follows my departure and return from abroad. It was an interesting and eye opening psychological journey. This is also about my dreams and my hopes for the future, that of my sons, their children and childrens children, my country and the globe at large. All the generations before me played their part, fleeing from their tribal homes to their fight for political independence. We all have the obligation to leave a legacy in this world. Now that you are on earth, what will the world say about you when you pass on? Food for thought, they say. I believe the ball is now in my court. This story is one of the numerous little windows into which the rest of the world peeks, glimpses and tries to understand mother Africa and her people. The global family is historically attached to this continent. Those people who believe in Charles Darwins evolution of mankind and those who are for the Bible readily agree to that. History is being made every second of our lives. Sadly, in many peoples lives or in most cases, it disappears faster than a droplet of water in the Namib Desert. Many of my people share this sentiment. What are we doing about it? Documenting it so as to immortalize it for future generations was and still is, to me, the best answer. This gives us a reference point from where we started to our current position. It also gives us a true measure of achievement by individuals, society and the human race alike. Most agree to that but there is always a few who argue that with our meteoric speed towards `globalization it does not matter anymore, everyone on earth will be known by code numbers and history will be the least of our worries. These codes, they say, might not even be race, colour or creed conscious, just what one can provide the world. I lived with my grandparents and some cousins for several years. They shared with us our family history. That sharing of the past bolsters self-esteem, knowledge in individuals, communities, nations and races alike. We learnt a lot from them and it would not be right to keep all of that to ourselves. The wisdom and the knowledge they shared with us was awesome. The fragments of memories of those moments are amongst the very best of my life. They played their part by giving it to us orally, which was the only way they could use at the time. This reality has greatly changed over time. I am happy the use of cyber world was introduced during my lifetime. Information can now be saved and shared in countless forms and easily accessed all over the globe; Thanks to the information age as one writer put it.
